Capuchin Monkey Best at Bluffing, Showing Off

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Bluffer of bluffers is the white-faced capuchin monkey which lives in troops on Barro Colorado Island, the Smithsonian Institution's tropical preserve in the Panama Canal Zone.

Safe in the treetops, where it is one of the most accomplished of gymnasts, one of the creature's favorite sports is to throw sticks, nuts and fruits at human visitors on the ground. Meanwhile it makes threatening gestures and seizes branches which it shakes violently with both hands. Sometimes it stands with head down and tail up, the white ruff around its neck spread so that it appears about twice its actual size. The white faces of the creatures are like those of badly wrinkled little old men.

Its natural habitat is the treetop world. There in daredevil fashion it catapults from limb to limb, distances of as much as 15 feet, and seldom misses its goal. The flight is made with arms and legs outspread so that they serve as a sort of parachute.

The capuchins live in bands of 20 or more individuals, and when on the move such a band may extend for as much as a quarter of a mile through the treetops. The members of such a band keep in communication with one another by a call which has been described as "like a human imitating a crow," given three or four times in succession.

27 Per Cent Now Live in Suburbs

NEW YORK—The population gap between suburbs and cities narrowed further in the 1950-55 period, with the outlying parts of standard metropolitan areas growing seven times as fast as the central cities in the period, according to data compiled by the U.S. Bureau of the Census.

Despite this trend, however, the central cities of the metropolitan areas still contain the biggest single block of the U.S. population, amounting to just under a third of the total. This proportion has changed little over the last decade and a half.

The population of the outlying areas of standard metropolitan areas gained about 9½ million in population in the 1950-55 period to a total of more than 44 million inhabitants. The comparable figure in 1940 was less than 26 million. As a result, the suburbs now have 27 per cent of the total civilian population of the United States, the highest such proportion on record.

Men Preferred In Two Departments

NEW YORK—Want to start an argument next time you're in mixed company? Well—according to the Better Vision Institute, men can estimate distances much more accurately than women can.

And, what's more, they also have a slight edge in judgment of speed. These skills are important to an automobile drive, particularly at intersections and in meeting oncoming cars.

In tests, fifty-four men and 54 women were measured for visual acuity, distance judgment, and speed estimation, on three different instruments. The people with good far-point visual acuity were found to be better than the others in distance judgment and a little better in speed estimation. But driving experience had no substantial relationship in either of these skills. It would seem that the average driver without special training improves very little in distance judgment and speed estimation after he once learns to drive.

Man Gets Mad When Police Play Unfair

HAGERSTOWN, Md.—When the police aren't playing fair, a citizen has a right to get mad.

That's the story Robert Wall, a 23-year-old resident of Martinsburg, W.Va., gave Magistrate William Kreykenbohm when he was arraigned on charges of exceeding 70 m.p.h. and passing on a hill.

State trooper Vic Guilmino testified he had to chase Wall at speeds up to 85 m.p.h. before he was stopped.

"I just got aggravated because the trooper was traveling in a plain car, not a marked one," Wall explained to the magistrate.

His aggravation cost him $115 in fines.

Washington Landslide

WASHINGTON—Officeholders and Government employees recently voted 3 to 1 in favor of retaining bean soup, a historically daily delicacy in House and Senate dining halls.

The balloting was initiated by the newly-formed Committee for Preservation of Bean Soup at the United States Capitol—which sounds like a highly influential organization.

Amer. Legion Auxiliary

April 14 is Pan-American Day. This is the day set aside by many organizations and agencies for recognizing in some way of our neighboors in the Pan-American Union. Through study of these nations we are in a better position to develop friendly relations which are vital for our national security.

This year the American Legion Auxiliary chose as the country for its study, Honduras, It is perhaps the least known of all the Central American Republics and yet it is the largest. It's history goes back to the ancient Mayan and was named by Columbus when he visited it. The people are mainly a mixture of Spanish and Indian, the predominant religion, Catholic; the main export bananas, and until recently the government was a republic.

The Legion Auxiliary, Unit 104, met at the home of Mrs. J. W. Flood Monday night. Three distinguished guests from Richmond were present and spoke to the group. Mrs Eva Jordan, Department Chaplain; Mrs. Rose Burnette, Past Department President, and now director of the hospital work in all the VA hospitals, and Mrs. Floyd Smith, Immediate Past Department President were the guests. Mrs. Smith was the main speaker and spoke on national security and civil defense.

The Unit voted to contribute $15 to the Patrick Henry Boys Plantation; $5 to the National Child Welfare Fund; $5 to the Kate Waller Barrett Loan Fund; $5 to the Crusade for Freedom, and $25 to Party at McGuire's Hospital.
